Trials for Tennessee Williams' 'Orpheus Descending' to Begin

Hampton Players' casting for Tennessee Williams' Orpheus Descending will proceed on schedule, Ed Long, director, announced today. Tryouts for the cast of nine female and 10 male parts will be held Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday next week, in the Hampton Players Theater at 100 Wall St., Redondo Beach. Readings will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Orpheus Descending is Williams' statement on man's need to accept the conditions of his existence, and the tragic consequences when nonacceptance leads to futile strivings for earthly atonement and resurrection. The play is set in the town of Glorious Hill, in the deep south. Jabe Torrance, owner of the local mercantile store, is dying. Lady Torrance attempts to resurrect her lost youth through construction of a confectionery which is a simulacrum of a wine garden in which she had experienced her first love, and through an affair with an itinerant guitar player, Valentine Xavier, who drifts into town in search of his life's meaning.

With the action of the play sweeping to a climax through nature's regenerative period in late winter and early spring, Jabe, seeing his own hell in the resurrected wine garden and sensing Lady's rebirth through her affair with Val, cannot control his rage at being a dying man in the midst of this renaissance, even though he would like to atone for his nefarious past. He swoops down with pistol-enforced potency on the buzzards who would pick over the living remnants of his emaciated being.

Catalyzing the action of Orpheus Descending are Carol Cutrere, who sees in Val one of her own kind, outcast and fugitive, and who leads the drama through to its ultimate conclusion: an affirmation of life, an acceptance of man's condition on earth; David Cutrere, Carol's older brother, who, since deserting Lady, has lived 20 years in spiritual emasculation; Vee Talbot, who is suddenly born into physical awareness; Sheriff Talbot, Vee's husband, who wears the trappings of power; Beulah and Pee Wee Binnings, Dolly and Dog Hamma, Eva and Sister Temple, the bigoted, hypocritical, and xenophobic segment of Glorious Hill's society, led by Jabe, herded by Sheriff Talbot; and miscellaneous men and women.

Anyone will be welcome at cast readings, regardless of previous acting experience. The play will open Jan. 15 for an unlimited engagement.

Rejected Knight Portrait on View

Southland residents now can see the portrait of former Gov. Goodwin J. Knight that stirred up a controversy recently.

The painting, by Minnesota artist Cameron Booth, is on display at the Los Angeles County Museum.

It may be seen daily, except Mondays, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the entrance to the temporary exhibition galleries.

Commissioned by the state to hang in the capitol next to those of California's other governors, the portrait was rejected by Knight as "too impressionistic."

Kiwianians Name Panel of Officers

At the regular meeting of the Torrance Kiwanis Club at Capri's Monday night the following members were elected to lead the club in 1960. They will take office in January.

YMCA Plans 14th Annual Good Neighbor Festivity

The Torrance YMCA has issued invitations to the community to attend the 14th annual Good Neighbor Breakfast Saturday, Oct. 17, from 6 to 11:30 a.m.

This event serves to recognize the neighborly spirit of the city, and is highlighted by the selection of a "Good Neighbor" to receive the Al Turner award.

Dr. Rollin R. Smith, chairman of the breakfast, urged all citizens to nominate their favorite neighbor in a letter to the YMCA. Smith said that past winners have been selfless persons who quietly serve others throughout the year.

In addition to the giant meal, the YMCA will provide continuous musical entertainment, neighborly fun, door prizes, and the naming of the 1959 Good Neighbor.

All proceeds go toward the support of the local youth agency's booming teen-age program. Many local merchants provide the food and equipment so that all funds can be used for youth.

Dr. Smith said that in addition to the breakfast, the Y will hold its first open house for Torrance. The breakfast will be held at the YMCA Headquarters, 2080 Washington Ave.
